Driving Directions + Ground Transportation Options

Denver International Airport (DEN) ↔ Boulder

The drive to Boulder from the airport takes between 45–60 minutes, depending on route and traffic. First, the common route is to exit the airport and follow the access road (Peña Boulevard) approximately 10 miles south to I-70. Take I-70 West to I-270 West. I-270 then merges onto U.S. Route 36 West. This takes you approximately 23 miles to Boulder.

The second option from DEN is quickest and involves far less traffic, but it requires using a toll road. As you exit the airport, you will pass the Rental Car agencies on Peña Boulevard. Shortly after that you should exit onto route E-470. This is a toll road. Toll charges can be found here. Proceed on E-470 until it merges straight into the "Northwest Parkway." Continue on this road until it terminates, at which point you take a right to enter onto Route 36 West toward Boulder. Additional toll/HOV lanes are available on Route 36 between Denver and Boulder—Express Lanes are located adjacent to the free general-purpose lanes, helping alleviate congestion on the road.

Walking Directions Around Boulder

Ambition & Timing

The city of Boulder in early fall is typically an ideal setting for a walkabout. There are ample pedestrian pathways, sidewalks, and a multitude of illuminated traffic signals to ensure pedestrian safety. The Wolf Law Building, recommended hotels, and Koenig Alumni Center are all technically within walking distance, but please bear in mind the Google Maps estimated walking times and an undulating topography.

Please remember Boulder proudly sits at 5,345 feet (1,630 meters) of Rocky Mountain high altitude. If you do plan on walking between venues, please consider timing, weather, and be sure to stay hydrated to avoid altitude sickness.
